GAO Participants: William K. Newman, Stanton J. Rothouse,
Thomas E. Mills, Allan I. Mendelowitz, Ivan R. Eland;
GAO/NSIAD/TEF.

1. The above members of TTAC discussed with the GAO their perceptions of the effectiveness of the multilateral export control system based on GAO discussions with relevant agencies in Washington and from their field interviews in 29 countries, including 10 COCOM countries. TTAC explained its role in supporting the export control community and its responsibilities for providing intelligence on those goods and technologies that are being targeted by the Soviets for their military programs. Both sides agreed that the export control process in the US Government could be improved.

2. The GAO requested to see examples of CIA's and the Community's completed work on studies that evaluate various countries export control systems, the effectiveness of multilateral export controls and the impact of technology transfer on the Soviet Union's military capabilities. TTAC in conjunction with the DO agreed to look into the possibility of GAO reading a selected sample of such reports provided the classification and protection of sources and methods are properly protected.
